

comes an impossible series of arbitrary prohibitions with no authority men can accept and no vitality that can long endure.

Sometimes, perhaps centuries from now, men will look again through the pages of history for the solution to the problem the world is facing today. They will find its solution in the first century. They will find it again in the twelfth century. What they will find in the twentieth century depends upon present day ability to see as clearly as Dominic saw and to pray as fervently as he prayed for the truth which will set men free.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Jarrett, Bede, O.P., Life of Saint Dominic (London, 1934).
Schwertner, Thomas, O.P., The Rosary (Milwaukee, 1934).

ANGEL OF THE SICK

CAMILLUS LILLIE, O.P.

All tenderness and smiles enshrined in one
Most lovely form, she waits beside the bed
Of pain. With kindly look each cross word, said
In dire distress, is quick forgiven by tongue
And dulcet care. She tenders old and young
Alike with love. Within her hand the thread
Of life is placed, when health and hope have fled;
Into her ear, life's agonies are sung.

O Angel fair, all virtues shine in thee;
As stars at night, they brighten darksome years.
O loving maid, you sip death's cup that we Might find it sweet. Alas! I count it tears
That you, white crested wave on troubled sea,
Will be forgot when health's sweet calm appears.